MacHale delivered another fun book in the series. I particularly like the setting and the idea of a superior race of cats. I laughed out loud tons of times over the cat humor. On the plot, the struggle against Saint Dane is getting worn...I am looking for the author to mix it up in the next book in the series...which of course I have already started. Again, this is a great series for boys and reluctant readers.

That was great. Sucks that Kasha died though. I wonder how everyone is gonna get out of Eelong though? Or if they'll get out. Can't wait for the next one.

It's officially hit a new level of "what the fuck" with this series. I think I probably yelled that at the book about ten times in the last 10 pages alone. Thank goodness I was home alone when I finished.

Aghhhhh. This book was so clever. I loved that the main species in this territory wasn't human, it made it even more interesting and the world building once again was fantastic. But then- surprise- humans still exist in this territory, but not quite as expected. Shines a lot of light on the way we treat some of the beings on our planet, but I'm not here to talk about that. I'm here to talk about the book in all its glory.

MacHale is so good with character development and the characters truly being unique and themselves the whole time. I absolutely love all of these people and characters so much. And Saint Dane is one of the most incredibly evil, vindictive, and clever villains I've ever come across and my hate for him just increased exponentially.

Pendragon has got to be one of the most resourceful main characters ever and I love watching him learn as he goes. He's got a good head on his shoulders and isn't afraid to do what needs to be done. He's one of the least static and most progressive characters ever without it being overkill. He's still, after everything, under every layer, Bobby Pendragon and I admire that.

I'm really loving getting to see all the different travelers from all the territories and how they interact with each other. It doesn't always run as smoothly as it could, but that's realistic and I loved it.

I'm so upset that I have to wait a few hours to get my hands on the next book. I need it right now. Aghhhh.

In this adventure Bobby travels to Eelong to find out the status of his dear friend and fellow Travel Gunny from First Earth, right off the bat he encounters a shocking twist to this territory and an unwilling Traveler and helpful but over eager acolyte. Bobby has to deal with a whole new wrench thrown in the game when he finds out that Saint Dane has mixed the territories in a deadly way all while Courtney & Mark are faced with a decision that might change the game forever.

This book was amazing, the characters were great as well as the action and suspense. the fifth book in the pendragon series and probably the best one since the merchant of death. i especially like what he's done with this new world, the setting takes place in a jungle, a world filled with perilous dangers, extinct animals, vicious predators, and many other new things about the new territory. but its a really good read. and the abilities of bobby pendragon and the acolytes of his are completely new and unexpected. the traveler on this new territory is even more unpredictable. bobby pendragon just getting done with his training on zadaa with his traveler companion loor, is now on the journey to find and defeat saint dane again. this journey takes him to a jungle like world where the quigs (saint danes guardians of the flumes)are humans!!! usualy it would be a spider or a snake or even a wolf but not on this territory. the people here are even stranger, giant cats who can walk on two legs!!!they live in the trees in a village called alexandria. down below the trees is where only the brave can venture because the natural predators are the tangs, velocoraptor like creatures who only want one thing...meat. the cats of this territory have the humans as pets and laborers, they are the brave souls who go down below the village to gather food for the village. but there is more then just that village in that jungle world, beyond the mountains, there lies a place where the humans are the superior race, little does anyone know that both of their lives are about to collide and destroy the territory

Black Water was a very good book, certainly better than The Merchant Of Death - a lousy introduction to this great series - but it still didn't meet my expectations of a Pendragon novel. The action all felt like MacHale was waiting to really dish it out in the final scene (which was well done, by the way). I enjoyed the territory of Eelong, which felt like a breath of fresh air, with interesting, if not a little cookie-cutter, characters. I don't want to give too much away, but let's just say that Courtney and Mark finally get a piece of the action, and Spader (hobey-ho!) joins back in as well. This is a great series, and I highly recommend it. You just have to get through the first book, and it's fine from there.

This is my least favorite book in the series so far. It moved too slowly, and for its length, it really felt like nothing was happening. It was only with the promise of things getting better (and my own stubbornness) that I finished this.

I did feel like MacHale did a good job weaving Saint Dane's "trap" without it being overly obvious. I mean, we knew something weird was happening with the flumes cracking every time Courtney and Mark used them, but I definitely didn't predict the ending happening the way it did. And then I was angry about it. I found the ending to be the strongest part, really.

I really liked Kasha. I thought she was a very believable character. I mean, seriously, some random guy shows up and tells you that you can Travel to different corners of the universe and the fate of the universe rests on your shoulders. I know I wouldn't jump right into that, so the fact that Kasha didn't, either, was plausible. It also left a lot of room for her to grow throughout the story. And while I definitely wasn't happy about her death, I think it was very effective in showing the cost of their war against Saint Dane.

The fifth book in the Pendragon series, Black Water strays from the first four in one way which to me is very intriguing. Much like the past books, the central conflict revolves around two tribes of people, but on Black Water, the controlling group are human-sized, intelligent cats and the oppressed population are seemingly unintelligent mute humans. Fascinating.

Obviously, the conflict involves the human slaves rising up against their cat masters, but it is not that simple. The humans are not trying to destroy their masters, merely escape to a legendary, if not mythical, land referred to as Black Water. Saint Dane is of course there to wreak havoc and he does so by committing a Traveler sin - bringing items from one territory to another. Unfortunately, Saint Dane is not the only Traveler doing this. As a matter of fact, the "good guys" are doing something much worse.

I really enjoyed this story. The number of characters and their personalities were impressive, and the plot was interesting and more complex than I first thought it would be.

Black water was a great book and this book was one of many books that reminded me of the first book in the series. There are 2 sides the Klee (Talking cats) and the Gars (Enslaved humans). In this book Bobby has to stay low since Gars were slaves and Bobby is a Gar. Bobby hated this since there was going to be a law passed saying Klees could eat Gars and he also had to be tied/leashed like a pet. Thorough out this book Bobby faces a difficult problem, using things from another territory and maybe saving this one or letting Saint Dane win.

"What can I say," I said after i finished the book. I kind of hated this book since Bobby went to jail many times and in much of the book he's helpless. All Bobby does is wait for help and with out the other travelers helping Bobby would all ready have lost. In this book Bobby know that no one's won since 1 traveler is dead and 2 are stuck on Eelong. I feel very compelled to read the next book since D.J. MacHale never leaves out the suspense and keeps the reader glued to the book wanting for more. I can't wait till they arrive on second earth where Bobby and his friends Mark and Courtney face off in a battle together against Saint Dane.

This one was always one of my favorites because it has almost all of the characters in one place at one point which has never happened before now. I also just absolutely adore the territory of Eelong and the way it is described; and especially the fact that the main beings are giant predator cat-people. Just fantastic.

Black Water is definitely a huge turning point for the series in the way that it ends, which I will not get into for fear of spoilers. But this is the last of the books that I remember clearly enough to predict the ending if I am remembering correctly. I do recall bits and pieces of books six and seven as well; but the last three in the series are a complete blur to me. I am excited to move forward and discover the fate of Halla for myself.

Pendragon Book 5: Black Water is of course, another action-packed story from the series of Pendragon. As good as always, no flaws. My recommendation to this book is that: READ IT!!!! If you're bored of reading Harry Potter, then it's time that you take the power of the Pendragon books in your hand. Start with any one of it, but you'll soon get the feeling. First time ever, I guessed Saint Dane's disguise correctly.

It was interesting, but all the books in this series are starting to get really depressing. None of them have happy endings. And seriously, who wants to keep reading books that end unhappily?
