Rosa Cline says

This is a level step 3 book for merging readers. Arthur and his family go to New York City to see the sites there. D.W. (Arthur's little sister) wants to stay at and see the Mary Moo Cow exhibit. After three days of being in New York doing everything she runs off down to see the window she wanted to see again. Although Mr Brown addressed that she shouldn't have done it and ARthur says she'll be a prisoner in her room. That was all that was said about her running off... which for the story I guess is okay but for a young reader-listener they may think it would b okay to run off because DW didn't get into trouble. But Arthur books are some of our favorite

Jitendra says

Nice book.

Elizabeth S says

Eh. Not really stupid, just so formulaic. The enjoyment probably rises a bit for those who are Arthur fans. Good message (namely don't wander away from your parents), although the consequences for breaking that rule are not clearly stated. A plus for the book is that it does introduce some popular New York sites.

Sara says

While my kids love Arthur and I think that he is nice character for them to relate to, there is nothing particularly special about this book. It reads like a cartoon and doesn't do the character justice.

Sammy Long says

this book was good it had words that were blue, then in the book there where stickers that matched the blue words. This is good word picture recognition
