This book was helpful. I used it for my science fair project. But one of the slimes didn't work.

I had no idea who Karina Garcia was before I read this, and since it's mainly a slime recipe book, I still don't know her very well, but she seems like a positive, happy person and I want to know more about how she makes makeup and her interest in science and chemistry. And why contact solution is the key for replacing Borax.

I plan to try some of these for a teen program.

Even though I'm not sure how great it is to be in epidermal contact with plastic byproducts like diaper filling. Even when Borax is eliminated from the equation.

Rachel Fellows says

My only quibble is that the book touts Borax-free recipes but includes contact lens solution as an ingredient (contact solution is actually the same thing as the Borax and water solution used in other slime recipes). There's nothing dangerous about Borax as it is used in slime recipes, btw. ;)

BUT! Ms. Garcia has lots of neat ideas in her book. If you love to make slime, I have to recommend it!

Some great slime recipes!

Kids got this as a gift, and I have read it cover-to-cover because I'm that kind of mom: the one who wants to make sure that this won't be a HUGE mess and stain anything. The recipes use pretty basic stuff and aren't anything you can't find on YouTube but it's nice to have them in a recipe book format. The nice thing is that none of them require Borax or really hard to find ingredients like bubble tea mix. Mind you, I have been warned that I need contact lens solution which contains Borax so kind of misleading to say "no Borax" Just not a box of actual Borax but still Borax in stuff. Now, we have to just test them out. Supplies have been bought for a good New Year's Day activity. Off to buy some glue. It's also not that expensive a book, so I'd recommend it if you are going to jump into the whole slime creation thing.

Glow-in-the-dark slime for Halloween, fruity, chewy slime the choices count to fifteen. I see a lot of library programming in these pages.

Melissa says

I haven't tried any of the recipes, but they look like fun.

Andrew (reads books) says

I really enjoy making slime. I really enjoy watching Karina Garcia making slime. I REALLY enjoy when she comes out with a book about slime. This had a lot of good slime diys and recipes. Some overrated; fluffy slime. Some unique; flaming hot cheeto slime. This has some great inspiration for slime ideas.

Beverly says

I haven't tried the "recipes," but they look very easy to follow, with not only text step by step instructions, but also clear photos of each step.
