Noah Stark always dreamed of moving to Prague. After twenty years service in the French Foreign Legion, he finally does. He should be living the dream, but he can't stay sober, his gambling is out of control and he's running out of money: fast. Then a deal comes his way that's too good to be true. By the time he learns that he's sold the wrong stuff to the wrong people there's no going back; his girlfriend has disappeared and he's running for his life. When he discovers that she's in the hands of the CIA, he agrees to work for them by baiting a trap for a Pakistani scientist. Then his aircraft is intercepted en-route to Iran. Thrown into jail, Noah escapes and returns to Prague to seek revenge.

Rhonda says

A very enjoyable read. Reading the book, I was a little put off by a small amount of the language, but did realize it fit the main character. But I found I kept picking the book up, wanting to know what was going to happen next and enjoying the author's style of writing. The author's writing was well laid out, interesting, and with light, humorous moments tucked in all over the place. The novel is fast paced, and I didn't know how it would actually end. I ended up very thoroughly enjoying the read and would definitely read another novel by the author.
