Celine says

Sarabande is a gripping and very moving story. Although we find out at the beginning that Janna, the heroine, has died, the story is full of tension, suspense and drama till the end. You get close to the characters: Janna, the heroine, is easy-going and yet complex. I felt for her when she was faced with her choices, when she was depressed seeing children die under her hands in the operating theatre. She's a doctor. Dan, her boyfriend, so typical the aloof type of investment banker, who, nonetheless has this depth and melancholy streak when playing the cello. Both of them undergo huge change in the short year the novel is running. But I also liked the style, the way film script is effortlessly woven into the novel. This is something unique but I think it is such a breakthrough of "novel" technique that we will see it again. I felt the urge to put on Yoyo Mah's CD of Bach's cellos suites to listen to the Sarabande when reading the book - and felt like crying at the end. Amazingly moving.
