The beautiful illustrations by Susie Ghahremani caught my eye first, and the quick-to-read, curiosity-teasing riddles about the mystery identity of the eggs enchanted my kids. Timely for spring. Besides, who can resist those peek-a-boo windows?

Katie says

Such a sweet book for toddlers this Spring!

What a nice surprise to see a picture book illustrated by Susie Ghahremani on the library's new book shelves! I have some of her artwork at home!

Diane Bowden says

Wonderful illustrations and content. I love the holes (eggs) cut into the images. My favorite is the crocodile. Clever, creative and charming.

Janet says

Great picture book focused on what animal will hatch from an egg. Eight oviparous animals are illustrated using a heavy stock paper. Each animal is given a double page spread illustration showing the nest of eggs and the following two page spread depict the animal that hatches from the egg. On the pages depicting the nest there are die cuts of the eggs. Very engaging title and overall a very well designed book.

KC says

Whose egg is that belong to? Turn the page and you shall see!

Crickets says

This is such a fun book for my little nephew!! I love the cut outs and the educational aspect, too!

Ward's sense of rhythm for this rhyming text was pretty good. I didn't need it to rhyme, but not having it be that same sing-songy cadence showed some skill and control on her part.

The painted-on-wood illustrations were beautiful to look at with the texture showing through, and Ghahremani's design sense. She actually gets the design credit for the book in the front matter.

The cutouts were fun, but not as meaningful as in some other books, so I would say Ghahremani just wanted to try it. In a book like Night Light each cutout was central to what I needed to pay attention to and comprehend. Playful features like cutouts or pop-ups shouldn't be there just because we can.

I was so hoping to see her use 'taglion' and 'aerus' in this book, but no dice ;(

Very cool, handmade-style illustrations.

This simple little book builds tension through the use of a guessing game and the wonder of waiting for an egg to hatch. On one page, the habitat and a little description of the eggs are given, with the question of "What will hatch?" Take a guess, turn the page and find out the answer. There are lots of surprises along the way. The clever use of die cuts in the pages that peek through in egg-shaped holes adds to the fun.

Eight different animals are shown here with basic information. Nicely, there is more information at the end on each of the animals as well as information on chicken egg development. Ward's text is particularly simple, just a few phrases with a skip of repetition. It is the illustrations here that really make the book. Done in gouache on wood, the images have a lovely texture to them that combines beautifully with the swirling nature of the art. The texture also reinforces the natural subject matter in a subtle way.

A great pick for toddlers, this book will keep them guessing as the pages turn. Expect to have to share it again and again. Appropriate for ages 2-4.

Hello everyone! Today, our book was What Will Hatch?, written by Jennifer Ward and illustrated by Susie

Ghahremani. This peek-through book takes a look at all the different creatures that lay and hatch from eggs, called oviparous animals. Each page features an egg and a few short rhyming words to describe the creature inside, with the animal's reveal on the next page (there is also a small peek-through cutout in the shape of each egg leading to the next page). At the end, there is a nonfiction section that lists the animals and their gestation times inside an egg, which was a nice touch.

This is a nice and straightforward book about egg-laying creatures. The minimal text make it good for very young readers, and also make it a great length for baby bookworms like JJ. The folk-art is very cute, simple and colorful for little nature-lovers. Overall, a perfectly nice book. Baby Bookworm approved!

This book is a great way to educate and engage children. This book enabled the reader to ask children what they thought was going to hatch and, in return, the children loved seeing if what they guessed was correct or not. I would absolutely read this book during story time again.

Read during Toddler Time on September 13th, 2017.

Miss Sarah says

A simple toddler and up book where different eggs are show and the reader is asked to guest what type of animal it is. Nice nonfiction companion at end about the eggs.
