One of the most important thing that takes priority while writing the biography is "the Truth", transparency is very much important to write the biography, its not an easy task to pen down ones own life event without hiding any of all those untold scenarios of ones life, Beechi who is endowed with the ability to take things in humorous way could only be able to easily open up all his ups and downs that happened in ones life, take it easy philosophy and the lateral thinking idea is the thing that makes this book most interesting one.

One of the best autobiographies I have read..

The age old cliché of how a comedian has tons of sorrows behind his smile .. holds true for Beechi..

Must read for someone who feels the need to relate to someone's journey to make sense of all that life has to throw at them!

Numerous authors and popular personalities engraves their autobiography as soon as they contemplate that they have accomplished something big in their lives. Those books are merely pages about how they have achieved success in their life by fighting against all odds. Though it's kind of an inspiration to many readers like me, but, the actual bothering point is, they are just human beings like us, and even they have shortcomings. Will they ever dare to pen those inadequacies in their biographies? I certainly doubt it. Beechi a.k.a Bheemasena Rao is an odd man out in such cases. He has written his autobiography in such a way that, the readers would get a sense of feeling that, this man is speaking his heart out or rather he is sitting beside us over a drink and narrating their entire journey without any white lies.

The book is not about how he rose to become a successful author of 57 books or how he achieved his title of veteran writer. He has kept himself to the ground and introduced us to a exhilarating and impressive interpretation of his life. As a writer, Beechi is a comical fiction writer. His ever great works like "Thimmana Tale" or "Thimma rasayana" proves that he has kept his grief-stricken life behind his comedy writings.

Elucidating his personal life perspective, author had three children and out of which he has lost a child when there was complications in his wife's pregnancy. That went even shoddier, when he found out that his wife was mentally ill for almost a couple of years. He made all his efforts to give a good education to his other children and was successful in doing it. But life was not a fairytale for him. At the age 22, his second son, a graduate in commerce and a primary critic of his works, died due to typhoid. This event has made the author to lose his focus for some time, but he bounced back. The only remaining child, his elder son, didn't disappoint the author, he went ahead and completed his doctor degree. He got married and now they are a happy family with grandchildren.

Overall, a fantastic narration. This is a different and yet the honest way to write an autobiography. The author never called himself a legend. He just described his life with all the ups and downs and his staunch atheism concept and the greatest love he had for the humanity.
