Emilee Wood says

This story follows three kids as they try to figure out if their teacher lives at the school or someplace else. For four days, the students wait outside of the school until the teacher leaves, and they follow her. The first day, the teacher takes the bus. The second day, she walks. The third day, she takes a taxi to get out of the rain. The fourth day, she gets in a car with a woman and travels a different direction. The students finally ask their teacher where she lives, and she tells them to wait after school with her. After school, the teacher's uncle arrives and gives them all ice cream because the teacher said the students are such good detectives. The ice cream man drops everyone off at their houses, and the story ends with showing where the teacher lives, on a boat. I enjoyed this story because many students do actually wonder where their teacher may live at some point. I didn't exactly understand why the teacher gave them ice cream because children shouldn't be taught to follow teachers home. I would use this in my classroom to display how teachers and other professions are just like students. We are all human in that aspect.

Kassie Houston says

1. Picture book
 2. No awards
 3. Kindergarten
 4. The basic message is this adventure book is transportation. Children learn that there are many different ways to get from one place to another. They also learn that there are different routes to get to the same place. As an activity I would have my students draw a picture of something they have traveled in/on and write a sentence about that experience.
