This has lots of love scenes for a lot of the book. Which is not really a surprise since its a Harlequin blaze book.

The four Quin brothers were left with thier grandparents while thier parents went on vacation and died. So their grandfather raised them and took them into his business. Now all four Brothers are in charge of different areas of the company. When thier grandfather called a meeting. He gave each of his grandkid a 100.00, a bus ticket and a company credit card. He wanted them to go away and get a job for 6 weeks then come back and decide if they really do want to be in the yacht building business.

Dermot had a two day bus ride from Seattle to Wisconsin and found out the credit card was cancelled.

Dermot was in charge of sells of the yachts and traveled to sell the boats. He will miss his brothers they even agreed to leave thier cell phones behind with them at home.

Rachel Howe has come back to live and work the goat farm her father left to his family. He made her the one to decide what will happen to the farm. She is the youngest child but really was raised by herself she even has a couple of nieces older than her. She has been at the farm for almost a year and feels lonely and worn out. Her brother & sister want her to sell the farm now. Her only help on the farm is her Uncle that has lived thier is whole life.

When Dermot sees her help wanted sign and told that she was probably still in down at the feed lot store. He asks for work and says he will work hard for room and board and small wage.

Rachel takes a chance on him and brings him home. Dermot works hard and kisses her and she has been lonely and says she wanted the kiss. They spent that night having sex right off the bat

Dermot is a hard worker and when the story is not about them desiring each other it is good and I like it I just read the dialog on the sex scenes akimmed those scenes.

They are both worried how they will fit together after the six weeks because of family businesses.

I was given this ebook to read in exchange for honest review from Netgalley.

B707 Sept2012. Dermot heads to Wisconsin with $100.00 in his pocket and his bus ticket to get there. He needs a job to pay for his 6-week stay there. He finds the job right away when he helps Rachel Howe load feed on her truck. She offers him a job working on her goat farm. Will the attraction between lead to more? How will she manage to keep her family farm when her brother is determined to sell it?

I loved this book. Dermot's grandfather sent he and his three brothers out on their own to experience life outside their boatbuilding business. Dermot ended up in Mapleton, WI, helping out at a goat dairy. He showed up looking for a job just when Rachel needed some help to keep things going. At first she didn't think Dermot was serious about the job. He was obviously well-off and certainly didn't need a job that only paid a small amount. But she was immediately attracted to him and took a chance. They quickly acted on that attraction and found themselves in a relationship that was more intense than they expected. Dermot also discovered that he was enjoying his time on the farm. He began to wonder if he wanted to go back to Seattle, or to remain with Rachel. Meanwhile, Rachel was trying to come to some decisions of her own. She had promised her father she would keep the farm going, but it wasn't really what she wanted to do. Both Dermot and Rachel had inner conflicts about where their relationship was going. Then her sister's marriage fell apart and she sent her teenage sons to Rachel for awhile to get them away from the stress. Rachel was worried about trying to be a parent to them and Dermot was able to help her with that. The boys took to the life, and then their mother came to the farm also and offered to help run it, freeing Rachel to follow her dreams. I loved the way that Dermot and Rachel stayed in touch after he went home and they began to get to know more about each other. It made the conclusion of the story even more satisfying. I'm looking forward to the other books.

Good book. Without that typical high drama that happens in 99% of these types of novels.

This is another one of those go out and find yourself books. The Quinn brothers are sent out into the world for 6 weeks to find out if they really want to stay in the family ship building business. Their grandfather entered the US with $100 so this is what he gave his grandsons along with bus tickets. This is Dermot's story. Dermot ends up in Wisconsin on a goat farm. Not exactly like the sales job he had before. But Dermot is a good sport and a hard worker. I also like the fact that he is honest with the owner Rachel Howe, that shows me he has integrity. Rachel has her own problems, she is struggling to hang on to the farm. Her siblings want to sell the farm and split up the proceeds, but Rachel promised their father that she would keep it. Rachel and Dermot are immediately attracted to one another, but smart enough to realize that he leaves in 6 weeks. And wow what a 6 weeks, things really seem to turn around for Rachel and the farm in these 6 weeks. It's nice to see a story where mainly good things happen, the only bad things happening are the pressure she is getting from her brothers to sell. So when Dermot leaves, he realizes that he liked being on the farm he loved being with Rachel and they were committed to making things work between them. I like to see how these two interact, not everything is a bed of roses but they seem to know how to listen and understand the other person. This really is a great book, and I hope that you give it a try.

I greatly enjoyed this book and am ready for the other three brothers stories. Sent on a mission by their grandfather for six weeks to see what they are missing in their lives. The brothers are given bus tickets to different parts of the country well away from Seattle. They are given 100 dollars cash and told to find a way to make a living. Dermot ends up working on a goat farm for a young woman that he develops a great desire for. It is a story of finding the ends and outs of goats, a new relation with the farmer's daughter that makes him wonder whether he should change his life for her or stay with his family. I loved this story and its ending.

The grandfather of Dermot Quinn has decided to send all four of his grandsons out in to the world to see life from another perspective. Six weeks away from the life they knew. He wanted for them to have the chance to see the life they could have, and not just the one they had.

Dermot ended up on a dairy-goat farm in Mapleton, Wisconsin. There, he took on the task of being the ranch hand for Rachel Howe.

The story didn't really 'send' me. I found I was left with a lot of questions. Like the story was written one way, and then gone back over to go another with the old pieces still left there dangling. Overall, OK, just...limp.

I received a copy of this book via Net galley for my honest opinion. This is the first book I have read in this series or by this author. I enjoyed the back story on each character and how they helped each other get out of their comfort zones and find what they really wanted. A good mix of romance and laughter.
