L'Effondrement du système technologique Theodore J. Kaczynski

Theodore Kaczynski, le prisonnier le plus illustre du vaste archipel carcéral américain, est une figure extrêmement controversée, ainsi qu'un véritable mythe. Beaucoup connaissent le personnage, et son manifeste, La société industrielle et son avenir, est déjà connu du public. Il a notamment eu deux éditions différentes en langue française. Cependant, aucune version existante de ce manifeste n'avait été autorisée et établie par l'auteur lui-même.

Pat Schakelvoort says

I hadn't read the Unabomber manifesto before. This book claims to include the only authorized version in it. I can imagine there are a lot of botchy version of the manifesto released out there.

For someone who has lived a long time isolated in a wooden cabine, Kaczynski sure could pen down some sane understandable material. His analysing of the leftwing is spot-on. They claim to be rebels, but put most of their time fighting backwards ideas, that the system already has rejected. The system profits from liberated women and minorities, cause if they would have kept down, they wouldn't be able or wanting to participate in the system.

His article "The truth of primitive life" is somewhat suprising, where he claims that the primitive societies arn't that idealist societies, many anarcho-primitivists claim to be. The primitives still have it hard sometimes and there are still class and gender differences in those societies.

The "Letters to" section is bit repetitive. Kaczynski mad his points already no need to bitch about details.
