Margaret Boling says

1/5/2018 ~~ I love this series, and I am sad to see the publication of the final book. It's one of the rare early chapter books that works for older readers too - readers who have difficulty finishing full-length chapter books, those who don't see themselves as readers, etc. It also works well for our youngest readers who are ready for more complex books without being ready for the issues and content they may have. Finally, there are enough inside jokes that adults will enjoy reading about Al's, Rip's, and Nikki's adventures.

Things cleared up: Why Mr. Hoarsely was the only adult able to see monsters. How/if Al's Leap Day birthday would be important. Why Dottie suddenly became unable to see monsters. I think readers will enjoy going back through all 12 previous books to identify the monsters wreaking havoc in town in this book (pp. 12-13, pp. 42-43: pranked, burnt, whittled, knotty, rusty, etc.)

Not cleared up: Why Al lives just with his dad; I've always wondered about the back story of his mom.

Francis S. Poesy says

I've read the first and the last book of this series after winning them from the author. I look forward to reading all the books in between. The stories are fun, fast paced, and action packed with lots of funny mixed-up, mashed-up monsters. I can definitely see these being a favorite of middle-grade readers.

My son has gone from Pre K to the first grade with these books and loved them all. This one has a sense of closure that makes it feel like Cummings may be ending the series. I sincerely hope not. Our family has grown to love them. This one has a set up before a twist ending that my wife said was "going to make me cry". Folks, when a fun adventure series designed for kids (not teens) can do that with adults, the author has really done something. Troy Cummings is to be congratulated for creating a universe our family has enjoyed visiting. We hope there are more adventures in store.
