Paul Aderholt says

Perpetuates Black Cat Stereotypes

As a cat lover, I dislike the tired usage of cats, black ones in particular, as "familiar," "minions," or other "evil" entities. There are actually people today who still believe old wives tales and silly superstitions surrounding cats. Words have consequences. Deranged subhumans need few to justify cruel acts involving black cats.

The story concept was okay, the ugly depiction of the cat was not.

Gisele Siegmund says

A heartfelt and somewhat eerie story about two sisters that have been separated by death. I loved the mythological creature included near the end!

J.C. Brennan says

A young girl grapples with the death of her older sister but what will she do when she finds her sister's soul is being held captive. Find yourself asking what you would do to save the soul of someone you loved. This is an incredible short story by Claudette Melanson. A story that moves your soul and inflames your imagination. It's a well written, moving story that anyone would enjoy reading.
