Everything Between Us Mila Ferrera

Daniel's got everything figured out. He makes a good living as an artist ... mostly through offering "private shows" to the wives of local wealthy businessmen. He never stops playing the game and never lets anyone touch his heart. But when his current fling offers him a few hundred an hour for art lessons for her reclusive, college-dropout daughter, Daniel finds himself forgetting his own rules. The girl is rude. Insulting. Incredible.

And she sees straight through him.

Stella is hiding from the world, not because she wants to, but because crippling panic attacks await her every time she tries to live a normal life. She's determined to push everyone—including her handsome new art teacher—away. But Daniel makes it utterly impossible. The guy is irritating. Mocking. Magnetic.

And makes her want things she knows she can never have.

What starts as a battle of wills turns into passion, where giving in means facing the things that scare them most.

I've got to draw the line somewhere....that's just

Anu CN says

And I thought 'Only Between Us' was a work of sheer wonder.
Man was I in for a surprise!

Knowing Daniel from OBU and reading about Stella from the blurb, I was gearing up for a very bad-boy-meets-bad-girl=explosives-fireworks-sex-on-the-beach story!

I mean common! We are talking about Daniel!

Man-whore-sleeping-with-cougars Daniel!

But I should've known better.

Mila made poetry worthy love story from the ashes of abuse, off course she can infuse an equally traumatizing condition into a heart warming story of hope and faith.

And that's exactly what she has done with EBU.

I never thought I'd say this, but I think I definitely liked EBU more than OBU.

I don think I can pin point to you a solid why.

But I guess subtracting Katie from the equation helped a lot.

So briefing it up, Stella had a VALID 'condition'.

No she wasn't broken, she was just a prisoner of her own head.

I thought the circumstances in which she meets Daniel would be highlighted and the entire book would revolve around that.

To my surprise, it wasn't even an issue! Mila just dived into the matter of importance and stuck to it.

No frills, no artificial flavoring, no over dramatizing human nature and NO over exaggerating the 'problem'.

Girl meets man-whore

Man-whore realizes he needs to revise and retry. Everythng!

Girl realizes she needs to do some major 'breaking bad'.

Somewhere down the line they fall in 'Fisher Amelia' kinda love (to those who aren't familiar with her work, it mean the purest form of love that gives joy to the world).

And then they fight their own 'demons', fight each others and then some together.

And as a reader, its beautiful to be a part of.

It breaks my heart every time I think of Daniel.

Hallelujah he wasn't raped as a kid, or has mommy issues.

Normal people can also wear masks people!!! They have their own reasons.

It doesn't make them a nutcase.

I hate it how authors normally always tag 'secrets' with a stomach revolting back story to justify it.

It is not even necessary. Thank God Mila hasn't jumped onto that band wagon.

And I esp LOVE how delicately she handles such cases without crossing that thin line of decency.

Girl, you are so going places, I assure you.

As a girl, I really wish every soul in need out there finds herself a Daniel.

One Daniel, could change your entire life.

One Daniel, could change your world.

And with his 'special skills', he could also rock your world (if you know what i mean ;p).

Sometimes, patience is just what the doctor prescribed.

And if you get lucky, you might find it all wrapped up in a Daniel package :)

A Daniel who will see YOU when he looks at you. Not what you project yourself to be.

Mila, I hope you continue with the series.

Maybe Nate next!

If that decision is based on the response to EBU, I know my wish is coming true :)

Again, Mila, love, THANK YOU!

Thank you oh so very much for the ARC!

Made my year!

ps: That cover!! OMYGAWD that cover!!!!

You could use it as a synopsis for the book

I LOVE it! LOVE.THAT.COVER!!!

I felt sorry for the h in this book. She's in the beginning stages of agoraphobia, doesn't know whats happening to her. Her so-called friends in college turn their back on her, her rich parents don't care about much except appearances and are thinking about institutionalising her - so even her home is not a safe haven. h can't go outside , her only outlet is cooking which her mom looks down on.

Her mom then insists on art lessons as a therapy hiring her latest boy-toy (the H) to come to their home and teach her for a few weeks. At this point no-one truly cares about the h or is making the least effort to understand her.

I didn't want to judge the H but I didn't think much of him in the beginning. He is a struggling artist, but pretty much brash and thick skinned. H is also a cocky, unashamed manho. When bored rich married women approach him, he doesn't mind, in fact he enjoys sleeping with them for cash and favours or recommendations that help him get more commissions.

Its a win-win situation for him all the way - free sex, no attachments, plus he gets ahead in work! He reminded me of one of some of those male gigolos who actually enjoyed their work! He is not in the least ashamed of what he does , even when the h tries to make him and is confident in his own skin.

Honestly again not to be judgemental , but I don't consider this guy ideal H material. I mean he was sleeping with the h's mother , for God's sake!! - and that too for some loose cash - but still he enjoyed it, he thought she was really hot, there were some explicit scenes of H with h's mom.

I mention all this to show the h's reduced options. Like I said no one else really gave a shit about her and she is reduced to this - taking up with her mom's toy on the side - bcos he's the only one who eventually gives a shit and who tries to understand. In the course of the art lessons while the H is first a jerk, he hears something from a friend that makes him aware that the h could be having a genuine psychiatric condition and may need help. He feels sorry for her and also thinks she is beautiful.

But the book was very well written with a light touch inspite of the heavy issues dealt with here (h has panic attacks, H's mom has cancer etc.) and the dialogue was snarky and fun and downright beautiful at times. And the h was so likeable - she was so shy and scared, even sex made her start having her panic attacks - but she was also genuine, sweet and courageous. She was also non-judgemental about the H being with her mom (unlike me,lol) and tbh I liked that. This book was her victory in every way.

The H/h definitely had a connection, the book was well researched, honestly I was drooling when I read about the h's baking and now am a couple of recipes richer for the book,lol. And some of the writing was just amazing, like when the h told the H she loved him.

The H, he was there for her, the only one there for her really and he loved her but really I felt the h was the hero of the book. The author makes even the manho H into a three dimensional person with layers that you can't help liking - he's smart, a great friend, son and brother, he's talented but afraid to rely on the talent solely, instead hiding behind what he's doing sleeping around to help his work.

In the end you're really happy for both of them, leaving them equally excited and hopeful for their future together.

"I loved her against reason, against promise, against peace, against hope, against happiness, against all discouragement that could be."

Okay, I admit I was a bit iffy to start this considering that the hero, before he got together with the heroine, had an affair with her mom.

Nope. You did not read that wrong. It says right there on the blurb. So imagine my surprise when I actually ended up loving/enjoying this book.

Mila Ferrera is not a new author to me. I've read her another book from her called Spiral, which, again, surprised the heck out of me. I know she writes character driven stories layered with angst with some of the most emotionally broken characters I've come across. But what really drew me to Mila Ferrera's writing is her sensitive approach and knowledge about psychological disorders in her stories.

I especially liked the way she wrote about anxiety disorders in this particular book. Stella was a vibrant junior college at Wellesley until one day, she went back home scared and defeated. Her life literally stopped and became a prisoner in her own home. Her parents didn't quite know how to handle her. They thought she was acting up and urge her to "get over it." Yeah, lovely parents. sarcasm

Her mother had this bright idea to enroll Stella in some art lessons done by her current fling, Daniel. Now if you must know, Daniel is an artist. Not exactly struggling but not rolling in money either. To supplement his income, he offers "one-on-one" art lessons to wealthy cougars. In other words, he services them and gives them temporary pleasure. Daniel is conflicted about it but his personality is such that he appears not to take anything seriously so nobody really sees the person he truly is until Stella.

I also like the build up in their relationship. This wasn't the case of insta-love or lust. Although, they did find each other fascinating. The Stella because of her condition and fear, misinterpreted some of Daniel's action which led her to (view spoiler) I wasn't really bothered by it because the author was able to actually explain their motivation. Did I agree with Stella's decision? Not entirely but looking at it from her POV, it was a logical and consistent with her character.

I rooted for Stella, although at first I wasn't sure I liked her but later on, she grew on me. Her character growth was tremendous. She really fought back and tried to regain her life. I loved that her condition wasn't glossed over by lurve. Quite the opposite, in fact. Despite finally having Daniel in her life, she still went and dealt with her anxiety by actually going to a professional. She didn't get better because of Daniel's lurve or whatever, she got better because she worked at it. And that is why I really liked this book.

If you can get over the icky factor, then pick up this book. It's really quite fascinating. :)

Edit: Daniel stopped sleeping with the mom after he met Stella and discontinued their arrangement which cost him a huge commission and (view spoiler).

4.5 stars!

This author has seriously surprised me. I'd never read any of her books before but this book sounded good so I figured I'd give her a shot. I was expecting something cute, fun, but not anything close to what I actually got. This book hooked me from the beginning and I didn't stop till I finished. I brought it with me everywhere; I was at the point where I was walking to the train and reading at the same time because I couldn't stop reading.

Stella won't leave her house. At all. Nobody understands what's wrong with her, not even herself. But every time she tries to go outside, she has a panic attack that leaves her wishing she could die. I really liked Stella and that she could appear both strong and weak at the same time. I also loved that she wasn't afraid to speak her mind, even if it made people uncomfortable. Her family life is a mess and I especially hated her mother, who only seemed to care about herself and how things would make her look. Which brings me to my biggest problem: cougars.

This is entirely my fault but I guess I didn't really read the book blurb as well as I should have because I hate books with cougars. It's just one of my book peeves that I do not like reading no matter what. So when I realized that Daniel not only has "sexual relationship" with older women but with Stella's mother, I was disgusted. It was so hard for me to understand why he had sex with those women. I don't know what I felt more; disgust or sadness. Mila Ferrera really pushed things by making the older women his love interests mother. I thought for sure I wasn't going to be able to get passed this, but somehow I did.

Daniel sleeps with the rich cougars so they will buy his art. For him, using sex to get what he wants barely even registers. They don't matter to him and he knows all they want is to feel young and beautiful again so he plays the part and in return gets lots of money and exposure. I think the main reason that he did those things was because a part of him was insecure about his art work and didn't think he could get anyone to buy them any other way. Which of course he couldn't be more wrong about but insecurities are a pain to get rid of. When Daniel meets Stella, something about her interest him and the more time he spends with her, the more he wants to know about her. At first, I just couldn't stop thinking "Ew, he slept with your mother!" but at some point, I just stopped caring. I know that she didn't mean anything to him and I could tell that he really cares for Stella.

I love when books surprise me and this one definitely did. I look forward to reading more from this author but PLEASE, no more cougars! If you like New Adult that's about more then sexy times (though there is plenty of that here too ;)) then pick this book up.

Dnf at 20%. Sorry:(

I enjoyed reading Spiral and Only Between Us so I was excited to read Daniel's story. Unfortunately, the scenes in the first chapter were just too much for me.

Chapter 1:Daniel's POV:

...Lisa's fingertip lines of my tattoo, winding it's way across my chest, all the way up to my neck...

She stretched like a cat in the sun, throwing her smooth leg over mine and nuzzling my neck...

My eyes drift shut again as her touch dips lower...waking my c from its temporary slumber...

See. Lisa was the heroine's mom. Subsequently, I was struggling with any dialogue or relationship developed between the two LCs. I could not stomach the visual from chapter 1.

My hero in the book absolutely can not have sex with the heroine's mom ever!

ag·o·ra·pho·bi·a - an abnormal fear of being in crowds, public places, or open areas, sometimes accompanied by anxiety attacks.

~ No prince is going to show up and break this spell. ~

Weighed down by fear, Stella's life is slowly coming apart. Home from college, and no plans of going back, she slowly starts to withdraw from life. No one understands her, lonely and afraid. She doesn't even understand what's happening to her...

It feels like I'm dying. Every single time, I'm sure I'm either going to die or that I'm going utterly insane.

Her mother decides to take action, she hires her Boy Toy/Artist to help Stella through Art Therapy.

Daniel is a successful artist and a game player. His success rides mostly on his ability to woo the wives of successful business men. When Stella's mother offers him some good money to give art lessons to Stella, he takes the job. What he wasn't counting on was the rude, and insulting girl to completely change his life.

This is where the story gets really interesting. We have all read stories with the tortured hero and messed up Heroine. And there are so many books out there with the 'broken souls coming together' premise, but with Everything Between Us it's so much different.

Stella isn't broken or tortured. She was just a prisoner in her own head.

Honestly? I think all of this would be easier if I could point to one thing, one moment, one person, and say this is why. I could explain it, then. Understand the why of it. Blame it on something other than myself. If I were a victim, maybe it would keep everyone from being so frustrated with me.

Daniel was much the same, trapped inside himself too. He puts on a show, controls what people see. Hiding behind his charming wall, his playful mask. Protecting himself.

Unworthy

Rejection

Failure

Afraid he will never never be good enough.

But the more time he spends with Stella the more bare and raw he feels, he begins to like it. The overpowering urge to pull away, tugs at him, but Stella has a power over him.

I have no defences against her. I'm so fascinated by her, so wrapped up in who she is and what she's doing that I have no mental energy left to pretend.

She Sees him. He sees her. It's powerful and emotional and you're cheering for them both to be what each other needs to work through their issues.

"I can see right through you, Daniel," I breathe, stroking his hair. "I see you even when you hide."

It was so refreshing to not have the underlying problem of their issues, something so horrific that your heart is breaking and tearing apart for them. And trust me there are a few of those reads. But to read about such a life altering condition and have no understanding of how you came to be that way, made me feel as much and as strongly as I did with one of those dark reads that we seem to love so much. There is a power to it. An understanding of helplessness for Stella.

It hits me hard and fast- I can see her. Not angry, not terrified, not insulting and mean, just Stella, desperately wanting to be free. If someone handed her the key to this cage she's in, would she accept it? Would she use it?

While they have this undeniable attraction, their relationship actually develops slowly and gradually. Both unsure of where it could go. Her with her issues and his with his. Plus the deal with him being her mother's "Mister" hahahahah.

But their pull is strong and while the issue of how they met isn't something that I would feel comfortable with, you kinda don't think about it in the moment. They have a hold over you. Drawing you into to them and their world. You just want them both to find what they both need.

I wait, wondering why it means so much to me, why I want her to surrender more than I've wanted anything for a long time. Is it just the idea of winning? Because it doesn't feel like a game

Can they both face their fears and move forward with each other. Be what each of them need and be that for themselves... ? Or will it be too much, too soon. Can the one person who sees you, be enough to face your ultimate fears?

"I want you to join me out in the world, because I'd like it better if you were with me."

This was brilliant. I loved this book. It is absolutely beautifully written. So different and unique that it held my attention from the first page. The writing in this book is absolutely perfect. The words Mila chooses are just spot on. I have this really bad pet peeve when reading an emotional charged scene that I can sometimes find myself thinking, oh my god why did you say it like that??? With Everything Between Us there is never a feeling that more would have been better.

Mila has done an exemplary job in portraying the life altering damage of dealing with an illness such as Stella's. And how fear and panic can breakdown lives, relationships and ones self belief. But also the powerful journey of overcoming ones fears. Absolutely amazing !!!

~ Out of difficulties grow miracles. ~

I love you. Against reason, against promise, against peace, against hope, against happiness, against all discouragement that could be.

So J'Anne is gonna get a kick out of this because she was adamant about this book being a no-no. But Michele and I gave it a try. So here goes...

This book starts out with young Daniel hooking up with Liza, a married cougar, who pays Daniel for sex by commissioning his art. She decides to pay him to give her recluse daughter, 20, weekly art lessons. Stella knows her mom is banging Daniel and STILL goes after him

So like mother, like daughter, she offers to pay him $1000 to deflower her!! REALLY??? And she sleeps with him!!

And they NEVER discuss the fact that he has banged them both. She even makes a comment that her mom is probably much better than her in bed..

That's what your worried about Stella?? That's all?? Your sure bout that?

So they hook up, keep it a secret from the cougar mom. Stella suffers from panic attacks, and she's trying to overcome them. Not that fact that her new man has porked mommy dearest. Once mommy finds out....NOTHING HAPPENS... no big fights, no yelling, no throwing insults. NADA.

Thats pretty much it. The last part of the book was helping Stella heal from her stupid panic attacks. I was so freaking bored, waiting for the drama, the fighting. I was completely annoyed with Stella's lack of personality, I skimmed the last half of the book. It was pure torture.

Sönja Dhillion says

I liked this book so much you read books where the hero is broken or the heroine broken or they both are and then they unite and become stronger but there broken because outer damage that has been done to them that then inflicted on them physical, mentally emotionally. But in this story the demons live within they are not face pain that has been caused by someone else its within them it is them .

Everything Between Us by Mila Ferrera was a sensational story. I loved everything about it! This book took me completely by surprise. I was expecting another NA romance, but what I got was so much more. Daniel and Stella stole my heart from the first moment they met. I always talk about how the connection between the two main characters is important to me. The author knew exactly how to pull us into the story and to tell you the honest truth ... I miss Stella and Daniel! <3 They were such a great couple to fall in love with! This was my first time reading a book from Mila Ferrera. I am sold on her writing style! I loved it! I had this huge smile at the end of this book and it left me with a happy feeling :)

Everyday life is a battle for Stella. She can't do most of the things a regular young adult does since she suffers from panic attacks. Even the most simple activity brings her fear. She is trying her best to fight this condition. Her parents are showing no emotional support to Stella during this difficult time, so she feels like she is all alone. When her mom decides to hire Daniel to give her some art lessons, she is not happy. Stella knows that her mom is sleeping around with Daniel, but even then she can't stop these feelings that are slowly developing for him.

I'm so happy that authors are writing about real life conditions. There is no such thing has a perfect person. We all have our personnal issues and fears. I like to read about characters that are REAL and that make me FEEL all kinds of different emotions. Stella and Daniel are the perfect example. Especially Daniel. He's a "Man-whore". I have to admit that reading about Daniel and Stella's mom was awkward! It just felt weird ... Anywhooo! I got past that and the rest of the story was just AMAZING! I loved how we got to see the transformation that both Stella and Daniel went through. They came a long way from when they first met. These two are just perfect for each other!

I also got attached to Daniel's parents, Caleb and Romy while reading this book. Romy and Caleb have their own book. We can read about how they fell for each other in Only Between Us. I liked them so much that I one-clicked Only Between Us ASAP! I can't wait to read it :) To my surprise I found another Mila Ferrera book on my kindle (Spiral). Yes, I said FOUND! (Don't judge ... I own over 1000 ebooks on my kindle and I have a little one-click addiction ... so of course I can't remember everything I one-click ... lol!!!) Needless to say ... I'm a happy camper! :)

I give Everything Between Us by Mila Ferrera 4.5 beautiful, eye-opening, heart-warming, wonderful stars! If you are looking for a book that is going to warm your heart, make you swoon and completely pull you in ... Look no more! Everything Between Us is exactly what you are looking for ;)
