The interesting thing about true love is that it never really ends for those who know what it means to love openly and honestly with all their hearts. It's something that's hard to define, and yet it's so deep in the soul it can't be ignored. And Brady Bradley is no exception to this rule when he finds himself marrying a man he respects and admires, but doesn't love as much as his first husband. Brady is one of those people who are damaged by love at a young age, and he's never recovered. All he's looking for with his second husband is trust, honesty, and a sense of emotional security he never could find with his bad boy first husband. But one week before the wedding, Brady's ex-husband returns to Palm Beach with his new, younger boyfriend and a business partner who wants to buy Brady's family home. Although everyone—including Brady's family—loves his billionaire ex-husband, Brady only sees the man who cheated on him and ruined his entire life. Will Brady be able to move forward with his life and marry the sensible, practical man in a bowtie? Or will he wind up devastated again by the same brand of daydreaming that once left him wrecked?
