Amanda Comi says

The issues are definitely reading much more smoothly and much faster now that we're focused on one set of characters for most of the issue. I think the creators have hit a great pace and style and the possibility of reading this book for another 3 years sounds more like fun than like homework. There were some weak points in the first arc where I was worried.

The art is impeccable as always. However I found the first half of the issue confusing. The second half was better. Still worth reading but I really should be reading them in graphic Novel format.

Carolina Téllez says

"...smells more like charred ass"

I love Ren's character and of course the little Kippa.

Tim Nowotny says

I am really looking forward to the island (and that this will not be an empty plot device). The factions move and everything seems to be around our protagonist. Everybody keeps their distance but exactly this tension makes for great storytelling.

You didn't make me in your image. You made me into something worse.

Did I matter to you? Please let that be true, no matter what I find in this place. I'd follow that possibility anywhere.

Akylina says

The art is gorgeous as always, but there wasn't much progress in terms of plot in this issue.

Venus Maneater says

where Maika learns that she can be a little softer and still be a good mother.

Gabriela says

I'm starting to think that I will not like the sirens... >.>
By which I mean so say that I most certainly do not like the sirens!

Elena Pacheco Zaragoza says

Cada número se supera más

Sarah says

Just when I think the art can't get any better!
And holy fuck the story!
But OH MY GODS the art!!
AND THE STORY!
AND THE ART!

I love Monstress with every fiber of my being!!

Sara says

god this book is gorgeous.

Shannon says

Nooooo I need mooorrrre.

Diana says

And it keeps the pace.

One of the things I like a lot about this series, apart from the strong female leads, is the fact that it presents you with a collision of different worlds/characters and everything just fits so seamlessly... it's amazing.

Amanda at Nerdification Reviews says

Lately I feel like more and more people have been reading and praising Monstress and I couldn't be happier.

I feel like this series is one which might bring more readers into the world of comics.

The plot in this issue had me wondering if we would finally get answers in the next issue. Maika's character has really been made to wait for the answers she seeks for the bulk of this series & now that she seems to have a firm grasp on her predicament I think it's time for the answers.

The flashbacks to Maika's childhood with her mother have added a whole new layer to this story, and to Maika, and I am interested in how it will play into whatever the ultimate end of this series will be.

Our little fox got quite a bit of character development and even the Monstrum within seems to have a solid personality now.

The change in setting from land to open ocean in issues #8 and #9 has allowed for some great changes in the art and color, but issue nine included a few flashbacks & scenes of elsewhere that were particularly eye catching.

I even posted a shot of the opening page on my Instagram because the colors were just--woah!

The members of the crew seem to be the most tangible of side characters in the series thus far, and have been a good addition to the story.

As always I am extremely impressed with Takeda's ability to make these characters look beautiful and formidable at the same time. I, as the reader, take them seriously and believe that they exist in this world without any other convincing. Seeing the Siren actually made my skin crawl.
