A new restaurant is opening up in Greenfield, and the Aldens are first in line to help the owner start up a food pantry. Allyssa says

It was a great book, and I liked the part where the turkey sign went missing.

ABC says

I was pleased to find this because there are not many Thanksgiving-themed chapter book. In this book, the kids are helping set up a food pantry, but it keeps getting sabotaged.

The ending was a little too happy-happy. I guess they wanted to finish the book on an upbeat note since this is for little kids.

It teaches two useful words: "fraud" and "heist".

Mackenzie says

Good

Stacie says

Someone is sabotaging a food pantry.... I mean come on, that is the lowest of the low. But that won't stop the kids, they keep charging forward. Every wonder if they will be adult jerks if they ever manage to grow up?

Y says

As usual, the adults in this series have ridiculously poor social skills and act like morons.

Jack O'Lone says

If I was going to paint the pantry, I would paint it blue on top and yellow on the bottom. 'Off the hook' is an expression, it means people are calling him on his phone like crazy. If I had a cat I would name it Jellybean, like my friend Zander's cat. Benny was excited to be in the newspaper. I want to be in one commercial when I grow up. I don't care what it is about, maybe a cleaning commercial, or a phone commercial like Verizon. That would be fun. I would like to be in that ad, I really like those ads.
