Don says

Awesome ending to a very long story arc. Everything is wrapped up nicely.

Joss says

Not bad. Entertaining without being spectacular. The expected showdown set up in the previous issue was fun to watch. And the ending on multiple planets was appropriate. Closure accomplished.

Steven Shinder says

The outcome of the duel was predictable. I was really annoyed that Vader sensed Aphra's presence yet did not pursue her. And Palpatine's face is drawn horribly. (Not the type of horrible that it should be.) I am really curious about the artifacts that Palpatine has, but I worry that we may not find out more about them anytime soon.

Spencer says

A decent ending to the current story arc, not amazing but not bad either!

Brandon St Mark says

An okay ending to an okay arc. Hopefully the next one will be better. I'm going to miss 000 and BT though.

PvOberstein says

"Moral dilemma averted!"

Nice conclusion to the arc. Vader didn't steal too much of the limelight. Perhaps even not enough. Looking forward to whatever comes next.

Micah Ulibarri says

Might have taken its job as an arc-closer too seriously. While the conclusions for most of the characters is good, it doesn't feel special so much as though they were trying to get it done with. Good not great. (couldn't stand the way Palpatine was drawn.)

Mia says

This was fine. Would definitely have been better as part of a double-sized issue 12. This is Kieron Gillen's last issue and it's a little disappointing to be honest, it seems so concerned with leaving its cast in a new status quo than of telling an exciting story.

Darth Vader's appearance is a little anti-climactic but then I suppose this isn't his book. For the most part the action is essentially a repeat of what happened in the last issue, which is why I feel it could have been better in a larger issue 12.
